The Story:

First of all, she was not the girl on the website picture. I suspected as soon as she walked in but the lady at the agency had been very personable and so I gave it the benefit of the doubt. The session was unsatisfactory to say the least.

After 20 minutes of lack-lustre performance to no completion, the niggling feeling got to me and I checked the website. On discovering that it was a different girl I asked her to leave. I called the agency to complain only to be told by the personable lady that she was sorry, "there were two girls with the same name". Though on the website I could only see one. I was offered ?10 off my next punt as compensation.

I had checked Punternet before using V london, and there was'nt a review. My suggestion is that if you use V london and you suspect the girl is not the same, you may want to go with your gut feeling before you pay.
