The Premises:

Her apartment was very nice, very clean and pleasant. Dominique had lit some candles and the scene was romantic.

The Lady:

Dominique is a gorgeous young woman, just as her photos show. She has curves in all the right places, beautiful clear soft skin, very pretty face, pleasant disposition. Given the sexy atmosphere and Dominique's beauty, I was expecting a terrific punt.

The Story:

Her looks and apartment were the good parts. The less good part was the sex. I told her at the outset that what I liked was to go very slow, with lots of mutual touching and exploring. She should have told me at that point that she doesn't do that. First, no kissing; even attempts at touching lips was met with a vigorous turn of her head. Then, no touching. Her front was too ticklish, her nipples were too sensitive, and she kept her pussy in unreachable locations; I never touched it, and only caught a glimpse of it once. At the same time, she pretty much avoided touching me. So really, I never was permitted to do anything with my mouth and nearly nothing with my hands. We had uninspired sex in a few positions, in which except for cowgirl she strove to keep completely motionless, and in the end I just lost focus and went soft. I suggested some hand action and got the 300 strokes per minute metal-polishing treatment. "Slow down," and it goes to 250/minute; just painful, and altogether hopeless. Within 30 minutes of arriving I was back on the street, frustrated.

I suppose it could just be me. Maybe I struck her as highly unappealing (although that hasn't happened before). I'm fit and clean. Or maybe it was just an off-night for her. But my impression is that neither was the case. I think she just doesn't like physical intimacy, and that's the only thing I really care for.

She did ask if she'd done something wrong, but I was not feeling articulate. My experience is that if a girl seems unwilling to do something, asking her specifically to do it is unlikely to produce the desired effect.
