The Premises:

Tatty, dirty end of terrace house, no parking on road outside, but available at the rear (dark and dingy)

The Lady:

Stank of cigarette smoke, no real attempt to look appealing, playing around with some kind of gambling app on her phone, seem completely disinterested.

The Story:

Short notice appointment, made by text message. Arrived at postcode at agreed time, given house number, entered and met by Kassie. Straight upstairs, fee paid, then she left the room, and mysteriously no sooner had she returned about a minute later than the front door was opened and closed loudly, and a male announced his presence. I was hidden in the bedroom, then he seemingly disappeared elsewhere in the house and I was rushed downstairs and ran out of the door, carrying my coat and shoes! Text received almost immediately saying how sorry she was, and that he would be gone out again soon - not that I wanted to go back other than to get my money back. Gave her every opportunity to contact me if this was a genuine unexpected entry, but nothing heard. Leaves me no option other than to believe that this was an intentional scam from the outset. Avoid like the plague.
