Never saw her, but her pictures on the website look good. The lady that greeted me was not Bonnie.

The Story:

I arranged an appointment to meet Bonnie a week ago and called London Dutch Connection the day before to confirm. I arrived at 1pm, as arranged, and was met by another lady (not Bonnie) who explained to me in broken English (I think she was eastern european) that Bonnie was asleep and therefore wasn't available. She offered herself, but eastern european girls don't do it for me. To be honest, I was totally excited by seeing Bonnie and could not imagine anyone else - I'd even bought her a box of chocolates.

Given that I'd booked well in advance, and confirmed, it was really disappointing that Bonnie didn't make the effort. Worse still, I emailed the agency (London Dutch Connection) to complain and they didn't even bother to reply.

I haven't met Bonnie, so can't recommend her or not, but I don't recommend London Dutch Connection - they don't run their business very well. Spend your 200 quid elsewhere, where the service (and the agency) is better.
