The Story:

Nice girl, good looking, slim, great figure, seems to be up for most things. No CIM/facial but she was friendly enough. Hardly any English though. Then 20 mins into it and I was told time was up. This kinda bugged me.

Have used this agency many times before and never had any real reason to complain about anything before. Punting's a 'win some, lose some' game, so I guess you've got to take certain things on the chin. Can't speak for everyone, but like I assume the vast majority of punters to be, I turn up on time, am clean, presentable, respectful and I pay the going rate with no argument at all. All of which means that the standard EE 'take it or leave it' attitude becomes a grind after a while. It's a buyer's market out there, and we'd all do well to remember.

Like I said, she's a nice girl, so I'll recommend, but won't be back myself.
