The Premises:

Her place is in the upper side of Earls Court Road towards High St. Kensington, not that obvious, which required a couple phone calls to the agency confirming directions.

The Lady:

She looks different from the pictures and not glamorous in anyway, contrary to that her pictures depict - so another Photoshop job well done.

The Story:

I used this agency on many occasions before and never had any issues.

This time, I called 90minutes and a guy answered me (before it had been women who answered the phone).

I made the appointment for 22:00 and he said he'll text me the address. I got to Earls Court, the lower side of the road near the station, and waited for his text message. At about 8 minutes before the appointment time I called again asking for the address and the guy said he'd forgotten and that he'll text it straight away. Sure enough, I received his text msg a minute later.

As I said above, it was not easy to tell which part of the road she was on (this road is split by cromwell road/A4), but after taking a taxi and going around the one way system a couple of times, and two phones calls to the agency, I found the place 20 mins late.

I had to ring the bell twice before she opened the door. When she did, she was polite, but a bit distant, and spoke fairly good English.

She walked me to the bedroom and I asked to use the bathroom. I returned to the bedroom to find her without her gown with only her black nickers on. I did not like that, before it felt like a soho walk-up experience.

I took a mint breath freshner and offered her one but she politely declined. Anyway, I gave her the money that she asked me to put on the table.

I started to undress and tried to get close to her to break the ice, but she kept on turning her face away every time I approached her. I asked if she did not like kissing and she said NO! That came as a surprise because the agency had said that she offered all services except A-level, which I personally don't like to do with a call girl anyway. I said to her that I don't want DFK (not with a working girl), but I want a GF experience so I expect kissing to be part of it. But she insisted and repeated that she does not kiss (for the record, I am a handsome bloke, very hygienic and never had issues of any kind with a woman). When I complained saying that the agency said she did, she said "if you don't like it, you can leave". This was music to my ears, because for a minute I thought I had thrown my money down the drain. So I took MY money back from the table, got dressed and left.

Punting is a tricky business, where you part with your money first, before you receive the goods/service. So this calls for total honesty on behalf of the agencies and working girls who should not mislead punters about the quality of their services.

After many years of punting, this is not my first bad experience, but this time I decided that enough is enough and wanted to share the experience with other punters.

This business is totally controlled by the agencies, most of them are run like cartels by a few individuals/organisers.

As a punter I am, and you are, always at a disadvantage because we part with our money first, then hope to receive the service we were promised.

We need a strong body to represent our views and stand up for us, but how and who?
