The Premises:

And here we go again. Pure Anne Maurice. Comfortable double bed; fashionably demure taupe soft furnishings, Esquire magazine on the corner of the bed to remind me of the bespoke Paul Smith suit I should be spending my money on, clean, accessible, good cup of tea and the best maids this side of Bedford (which, come to think of it, is to be unintentionally damned by faint praise.) Best in the business, or at least everything I want.

The Lady:

See the photos, to which there is little to add. Very pretty girl with the best quality of all in abundance; a warm personality and a winning smile.

The Story:

A couple of weeks earlier I'd been at HOD on a mission with another lady but was momentarily left waiting (in the kitchen) for a room to free up when, from behind the fridge door, emerged Mei clad in not much and munching on a bowl of pineapple cubes. Seeing me, she burst into a giggle and did the right thing, although I declined the offer of fruit at the time. Still, I knew that anyone with that sort of twinkle in their eyes would be fun.

And so it proved. You know I don't do match reports but Mei is funny, laughs a lot, pretty, easygoing, not too serious, and very, very good at what she does. If you want to really relax and leave with a smile on your face with someone who is as exciting "in the room" (as they say) as any girl I've seen lately, Mei's for you. As The Sun would say, "a right little cracker" and a girl who could give a lot of others in this industry a lesson in how to smile.

Very highly recommended.
